Dear Members,

Our community knows firsthand that you can't love what you don't know. It's our common love of whitewater that makes us such passionate defenders of rivers. The American Whitewater River Stewardship Team is positioned to lead, train, and support community-based activism that represents the interests of boaters and the rivers we enjoy. The framework below provides an illustration of how we function and the impacts of our stewardship efforts.

Protect American Whitewater has been a key player in protecting our treasured free-flowing rivers through growing the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

Restore American Whitewater has restored flows to dry rivers below dams across the country, and is a pioneer in bringing political and scientific legitimacy to restoring flows in a way that both improves riparian habitat and connects people to rivers.

Enjoy American Whitewater knows that those who have a personal connection to rivers are the most powerful and effective river conservation advocates. We connect the public with rivers through promoting whitewater safety and improving public access to waterways. We also maintain the National Whitewater Inventory — a comprehensive database of over 7,000 whitewater runs, representing the nation's most extensive atlas of whitewater rivers.

This compelling mix of river stewardship allows American Whitewater to foster strong corporate and foundation support. In 2012, we were able to solicit three additional dollars for every membership dollar we received. That three to one match allows us to stretch your membership investment. Where else can you make a one-dollar investment and immediately stretch it to four dollars in support of river conservation? This match, combined with a lean organizational model, allows American Whitewater to leave a footprint much larger than our actual shoe size.

As we look to the future, we continue to appreciate the importance of rivers and their role in supporting the health and well being of the paddling community. We remain committed to giving back to these special places. American Whitewater river stewardship projects are making a real difference to rivers and local communities, while providing flows for healthy rivers and recreation.

We measure success in cubic feet per second — the amount of water flowing freely down a river. If paddlers are floating on that water, celebrating the river and its environment, than we are doubly successful. This was the case when paddlers first floated through the Condit Dam site, and paddled the first scheduled releases on the Upper Nantahala and Bear rivers in 2012. It is also the case in Colorado, Washington, Montana, and across the country where we worked towards permanent protection for hundreds of miles of our nation’s wildest rivers. These projects exemplify our work: because of our involvement you can go to a river and see a river — not a reservoir, not a dry riverbed, but a vibrant flowing river. The photos in this report give you a glimpse into some of our major milestones from 2012. We hope they are as inspiring to you as they are to us.

Pacific Northwest

WHITE SALMON: After more than two decades of effort, American Whitewater celebrated the restoration of the White Salmon River following the complete removal of Condit Dam, a project that took place over the spring and summer of 2012. By the fall of 2012, paddlers were introduced to a new section of whitewater that had been buried underneath the waters of Northwestern Reservoir for the past century.

WILD OLYMPICS: In 2012 Congressman Norm Dicks and Senator Patty Murray introduced the Wild Olympics Wilderness and Wild and Scenic Rivers Act of 2012. This legislation would protect some of the Pacific Northwest’s most treasured backcountry paddling destinations that emerge from the majestic old-growth forests of the Olympic Peninsula.

THUNDER CREEK WILDERNESS: While we have not seen much action for land and river conservation in Congress since 2009, Secretary Salazar administratively designated 3500 acres along Thunder Creek in North Cascades National Park as wilderness in September of 2012. This backcountry paddling destination in the Skagit River drainage was at one time considered for hydropower development but is now protected.

California

YOSEMITE: Through American Whitewater’s involvement in the Wild and Scenic planning process and ongoing collaborative efforts, Yosemite National Park is now considering opening up paddling opportunities on the Merced and Tuolumne Rivers.

YUBA: Flow studies in 2012 allowed rafters to enjoy the Our House Dam run on the Middle Fork Yuba River. American Whitewater will use the results to negotiate new flow releases for the river, which will benefit aquatic species and whitewater boaters.

Northern Rockies

From big waves to big bears, the rivers of Montana and Idaho are some of the wildest in the United States. American Whitewater has worked to protect the Northern Rockies’ wildest rivers from dams and other impacts through pursuing Wild and Scenic River protections.

Southern Rockies

Paddlers have helped AW define recreational flows for nearly every major watershed in Colorado and the Southern Rockies — from high-mountain tributaries, to rolling desert rivers. This year with the information collected from hundreds of rafters, kayakers, and canoeists, AW worked with the US Bureau of Reclamation and Interior Department on the Colorado River Basin Water Supply and Demand Study to ensure that western water policies preserve boatable flows into the future.

From alpine steep creeks like Oh-Be-Joyful to desert floats like Escalante and Dominguez Canyons, Colorado's Gunnison River Basin provides a wide range of outstanding paddling opportunities that appeal to paddlers of all abilities. In 2012, we developed a strategy to define recreational flow needs throughout the Basin, and added staff capacity to coordinate the new Gunnison River Basin Program. These efforts promise to help us protect recreational flows in 2013 and beyond.

In the dry southwestern corner of Colorado, the Dolores River continues to suffer from persistent low-flow conditions, where boatable days have declined by 50% since McPhee Reservoir was constructed in the late 1980s. This year American Whitewater, the State of Colorado, and the US Bureau of Reclamation developed new Management Guidelines for releases of water from McPhee Dam into the Lower Dolores River that sustain native fish, public safety and improve rafting flows. These guidelines have been published in the draft Implementation, Monitoring, and Evaluation Plan for the Lower Dolores River.

Southeast

Paddlers sampled the first of 30 years of flow releases on North Carolina's Upper Nantahala in the fall of 2012. American Whitewater worked with our regional partners to negotiate these flows over the past decade, and we are now working with the Forest Service and Duke Energy on improving public access to the river.

Northeast

We launched a new regional stewardship program in the Northeast in 2012 and quickly dove into a wide range of great projects. From negotiating releases on Vermont's Class V Green River, to working to protect river access to the Class II/III Deerfield, our list of projects has something for everyone. We even kicked off successful negotiations for releases on Vermont's big water Missisquoi River.

Mid Atlantic

American Whitewater worked with a diverse coalition of paddlers and sportsmen throughout 2012 to seek clarity and improvements to stream access laws in Virginia. Legislation was introduced to that end, and while it failed to pass, we believe the idea of keeping people connected to rivers will gain favor in the next legislative session.
