

2014 Annual Report

Dear Members,

On behalf of the American Whitewater Board of Directors and staff, we are pleased to report that AW achieved another year of solid financial performance and stewardship success for our members in 2014. American Whitewater is the only national non-profit organization exclusively focused on conserving and restoring whitewater rivers. Each day, we work to protect free flowing rivers, restore flows to rivers impacted by hydroelectric projects, secure access, and advocate for new Wild and Scenic rivers throughout the country. Your membership is a key part of what makes our efforts possible.

In 2014 American Whitewater directly participated in management decisions that improved flows and river access associated with dams on 25 rivers across the country. We advocated for new Wild and Scenic River protections across the nation, and successfully lobbied for designation of five new river reaches as Wild and Scenic. They are MF Snoqualmie (WA), Pratt (WA), Illabot (WA), Missisquoi (VT), Trout (VT). We also secured 19 new and/or improved river access areas on streams in PA, CO, CA, and WA, and collaboratively managed river access on at least 17 rivers. This includes sites we own, like the Watauga (NC) and Elkhorn (KY), and land leased for access to the Gauley (WV). All told, these efforts benefited several thousand miles of spectacular rivers, and hundreds of thousands of river enthusiasts.

We take organizational transparency seriously. American Whitewater received our fifth straight 4-Star Rating (the highest possible) from Charity Navigator for our financial management. Only 4% of the charities Charity Navigator rates have received at least five consecutive 4-star evaluations, showing that American Whitewater outperforms most other charities in America. This designation from Charity Navigator differentiates American Whitewater and means that your donation will be put to good use and result in tangible gains for river stewardship!

The key to our success is the strong backing of our members; it is only through your support that we can continue to take the long view on river stewardship. As we look to the future, we continue to appreciate the importance of rivers and their role in supporting the health and well being of the paddling community. At American Whitewater, we remain committed to giving back to these special places through our river stewardship program and appreciate your support of this important work.

Thanks for your support,

Chris Bell
President, Board of Directors

Executive Director

National

American Whitewater’s small staff kept a forward lean on well over 100 river stewardship projects in 2014, playing vital roles in bringing down dams, restoring flows, and protecting some of our nation’s last great free-flowing rivers. In 2014 we stood up and asked communities across the country to support new Wild and Scenic river protections, and it worked: several outstanding streams were designated and protected in 2014. We fought for more dam removals while witnessing the first salmon migrations up Washington’s Elwha River following the removal of two large dams. We tested dewatered rivers like West Virginia’s New River Dries for their recreational potential while paddlers across the country enjoyed the fruits of many of our flow restoration efforts. And we met with National Park Service Staff about the future of boating through Yosemite Valley on the Merced River, resulting in a new decision to welcome paddlers to share in that incomparable experience. It was an outstanding year of protecting and restoring rivers side-by-side with many passionate paddlers who support our mission.

PNW

American Whitewater reached several critical milestones in our efforts to enhance public access and protect free-flowing rivers in the Pacific Northwest in 2014. The final chunks of concrete came down from Glines Canyon Dam, freeing the Elwha River (WA). On both the Elwha and White Salmon Rivers, we continued to work to enhance river-based recreation and protect fishery resources. We were honored to have our work featured in the Patagonia film DamNation and participate in community screenings and panel discussions across the country. In 2014 we also succeeded in adding the Middle Fork Snoqualmie and Pratt Rivers, and Illabot Creek to the Wild and Scenic system – all of which have faced past threats from hydropower development. Our most ambitious conservation effort in the region – Wild Olympics – reached a critical milestone when freshman Congressman Derek Kilmer joined Senator Patty Murray in introducing legislation, which would protect over 450 miles of rivers on the Olympic Peninsula. Finally, in 2014 we completed access improvements to several rivers throughout the region, including the Sauk, Skykomish and North Fork Nooksack Rivers in Washington and Clackamas River in Oregon. We also continued planning and construction on several additional projects that will be completed in the coming year.

California

In California, American Whitewater achieved a number of successes in 2014 after years of work. Most notably, after years of engaging in Yosemite National Park’s Wild and Scenic planning process, the Park released the final Merced and Tuolumne Wild and Scenic River Management Plans, opening opportunities for paddlers to enjoy the length of the Merced River and the coveted Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne. Also, after years of educating the California Energy Commission about the impacts of hydropower, the Commission declared that hydropower in British Columbia did not meet the state’s Renewable Portfolio Standards criteria for importing power. The decision ensures that the economic incentive to develop B.C.’s rivers will not come from California. Finally, we also saw the fruits of many years of hard work to restore whitewater flows on rivers impacted by hydropower through the FERC relicensing process. We negotiated these releases to ensure that water for downstream cities and farms are met and that ecological resources are protected. As a result, in the midst of the third year of extreme drought in the state, there were 27 days of whitewater opportunities during the summer of 2014.

Northeast

The northeast program had a busy year in 2014 working on hydropower relicensing and Wild and Scenic Rivers. American Whitewater worked to restore flows and secure access to rivers throughout the region impacted by hydropower, including the Green River and Little River (VT), Schoharie River (NY) and the Little Androscoggin (ME). On the Connecticut River, we conducted controlled flow studies at hydropower projects at Sumner Falls and Turners Falls (MA, NH, VT). We also worked to support efforts to designate the Missisquoi and Trout Rivers (VT) and the Farmington River (CT) as new Wild and Scenic Rivers. We initiated a regional effort to support additional designations by creating the Northeast Wild and Scenic River Caucus, which focuses on creating a movement in support of Wild and Scenic River designation in the Green Mountains of Vermont and the White Mountains in New Hampshire.

Southern Rockies

Even in the dry Colorado River Basin, and on rivers of the Southern Rockies, we had a big year! American Whitewater secured optimal recreational releases on the Upper Colorado to support late season paddling in Gore Canyon and Glenwood Springs, and after several years of work, a new whitewater park has been created that will help us permanently protect flows for recreation. On Utah’s Green River, we worked with the State and the Natural Resources Conservation Service to rehabilitate the Tusher Canyon Dam – the last barrier to safe navigation in the entire reach of the river from Wyoming to the Colorado River – and have ensured that paddlers can safely run the river at all flows. In Colorado, we worked with Senators Mark Udall and Michael Bennet, the BLM and USFS, and the White House to establish the Browns Canyon of the Arkansas River National Monument. In Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah, we’ve worked with hundreds of volunteers to protect streamflows on rivers and creeks that provide high-value paddling opportunities, and to identify tools to keep water in our rivers. We’ve successfully protected streamflows on some of our highest priority rivers in the region, conserved critical landscapes that surround the most popular paddling reaches in the country, and eliminated threats to public safety from out-dated dams.

Northern Rockies

American Whitewater was involved in a strategic initiative to protect the Northern Rockies’ best whitewater streams from dams and other impacts throughout 2014. These efforts added Callahan and Ross Creeks in Montana to the roster of streams protected by the Forest Service as eligible for Wild and Scenic designation in 2014. We proposed many more streams for protection across Montana and Idaho that remain under consideration. Our biggest focus in the region was as a steering committee member of Montanans for Healthy Rivers, a coalition pursuing the largest Wild and Scenic Rivers bill the region has ever seen. As part of this group, we built place-based business and individual support for river protection throughout 2014, and actively supported the passage of the Rocky Mountain Front Heritage Act and the North Fork Watershed Protection Act, which permanently protected iconic Montana landscapes.

Southeast

American Whitewater launched an exciting new river conservation initiative in 2014 aimed at protecting Western North Carolina’s finest rivers and creeks. Through the Nantahala and Pisgah National Forest planning process we proposed that the Forest Service protect new streams as “eligible” for Wild and Scenic designation. At the same time we started building support for future congressional designation of Wild and Scenic Rivers. In Tennessee we began exploring opportunities to use the State Scenic Rivers Act to protect several creeks tumbling off of the Cumberland Plateau. In addition to these conservation initiatives, our efforts to secure a strong court decision regarding public river access heated up on the South Fork of the Saluda, and we continued to implement the relatively new dam releases on the Upper Nantahala and West Fork Tuckasegee.

Mid Atlantic

River access in the Mid-Atlantic region remained a priority for American Whitewater in 2014. We celebrated the completion of the Holtwood Whitewater Park on the Susquehanna River (PA), which we negotiated to help mitigate the impacts of the expanded Holtwood Hydroelectric Project. We transferred our Blackwater River Access Area to the town of Hendricks, WV to ensure the site is maintained into the future for high-quality stream access. In Virginia, we continued to pursue improvements to the stream access laws, but did not secure legislation. We also kicked off a collaborative effort with the National Park Service to develop and implement a river access plan for the Shenandoah and Potomac Rivers in the vicinity of Harper’s Ferry, WV. Last but not least, we continued to support Upper Yough access (MD), Savage River flows (MD), and Gauley River access where we lease the take-out field for public use.
